What is Broken Wings?

'Broken Wings' is an exciting documentary project currently in production in Melbourne. It follows the incredible legend that possibly as many as twelve brand new Spitfires still in their original packing crates are buried somewhere in southern Queensland. This documentary will explore the story from a range of perspectives and set out to discover whether in fact the aircraft do exist... and find them. James Carter and Karl von Möller, both warbird enthusiasts from Melbourne are behind the venture and it's their fascination with warbird aircraft and a desire to tell a 'ripper of a yarn', that's driving this exciting production being shot all over Australia.

Before the camera first rolled in August 2006, James and Karl had spent six years of their own time and money exhaustively researching the legend of the Oakey Spitfires. Their research endeavours have taken them throughout Australia, chasing up any leads that might shed further light on the legend. They have also had the opportunity to speak to countless serving and former ADF members from the Navy, Army and Air Force who have all heard of the story and recounted their version of events. With everything they now have in their possession, the hunt is on in earnest.

Do you have a passion for historical aircraft and share James and Karl's sense of adventure? Then maybe you'd like to come along for the ride. Broken Wings is looking for investors to contribute towards the cost of production. James and Karl are more than happy to discuss investment options and take enquiries from anyone interested in becoming involved in this exciting project. What's more, if you have any information or know of someone who may have served at Oakey during World War II, we'd love to hear from you too.

The production company behind Broken Wings is Artisan Films, Karl von Möller's own production company. Artisan has been in the film production business for the past 10 years and in that time it has produced hundreds of television commercials, documentaries and music videos both here in Australia and overseas. Karl has also found the time to shoot 4 feature films in that time. Look out for Karl's latest film 'Storm Warning' when it's released later this year. For more information visit www.brokenwings.com.au or email us at info@brokenwings.com.au.
